Rita Paulina, shot twice in the arm and once in the leg, leaves James Holmes' court appearance Monday. Holmes is accused of killing 12 people in an Aurora, Colo., movie theater. REUTERS

Victims in court

Reuters

CENTENNIAL, Colo. Victims of the Aurora movie theater shooting—one in a wheelchair—and many of their relatives came to the Arapahoe County Courthouse on Monday morning as the prosecution and defense teams prepared to hear the charges against suspect James E. Holmes.

Relatives of the youngest shooting victim killed, 6-year-old Veronica Moser-Sullivan, were among the first in line for one of 35 courtroom seats reserved for victims and their family members. The relatives entered the courtroom first.

Mary Hansen of Denver, an aunt of Veronica's mother, said the family members came to support each other, including Veronica's father, Ian Sullivan, who Hansen said "is just broken up."

They also came to see the accused shooter, Hansen said, "to have some sense of who he is, like a character study almost, to put a name and face together."

Judy Woodard, a Moser family friend from Palm Springs, said they were grateful to be able to see the accused.

"So many times when something like this happens, the person ends up killing themselves, like Columbine," she said.

Some of those wounded in the shooting showed up for the hearing, including Rita Paulina, 45, who was brought into court in a wheelchair, still wearing hospital bracelets and one of her legs wrapped in gauze. Her husband, Anggiat Mora, 47, said they went to see "The Dark Knight Rises," the Batman movie at which the shooting broke out, with their 14-year-old son and came to Monday's hearing to "continue what happened at last week's" hearing.

Annie Dalton of Aurora, the aunt of shooting victim Ashley Moser, brought her teenage daughter to the hearing. She said Moser, who suffered a miscarriage this weekend, was "doing better." She looked weary as she headed into the courthouse, saying she was unsure why she came.

"I don't know. You're in so much pain, you're just looking for answers," Dalton said.

Holmes charged with 24 murder counts in 'Dark Knight' rampage

Reuters

CENTENNIAL, Colo. The former graduate student accused of opening fire at a Denver-area screening of the latest "Batman" film, killing 12 people, was formally charged on Monday with 24 counts of first-degree murder and 116 counts of attempted murder.

James Holmes, 24, was formally charged during his second court appearance since his arrest after the massacre during a packed showing of "The Dark Knight Rises" shortly after midnight on July 20.

The rampage left 12 dead and 58 injured, several critically.

Holmes, wearing jail garb with his hair still dyed orange but with the color fading to pink in places, sat impassively with two defense attorneys through the 45-minute hearing.

But he looked more alert than during his first court appearance one week ago, when he looked dazed and groggy. The courtroom was packed with members of the media and family members of victims.

Holmes spoke only once Monday, answering "yes" when Arapahoe County District Judge William Sylvester asked if he understood the charges against him.

Prosecutors essentially charged Holmes with two murder counts for each victim—one standard first-degree murder charge plus one count of murder with extreme indifference.

In all, prosecutors have charged Holmes with 142 criminal counts in the shooting: the 24 murder and 116 attempted murder counts, plus one count of possession of an explosive device and one count of committing a crime of violence.

During the hearing, defense attorneys asked that prosecutors turn over evidence collected in the case. They are seeking a package that news reports have said was sent by Holmes to a University of Colorado psychiatrist, Dr. Lynne Fenton.

Prosecutors responded that they had not yet opened that parcel, which according to Fox News contained a notebook outlining the shooting scenario, including stick-figure drawings.

Holmes, a San Diego native, was a doctoral student of neuroscience at the university's Anschutz campus before filing paperwork to drop out in June.

Court documents filed on Friday by defense lawyers said Holmes had been under Fenton's care.

Lollapalooza organizers revealed big-name acts on the CTA, but don't expect to see big names on the "L"

Ads hinting at the headliners for the three-day music fest, which begins Friday in Grant Park, began appearing on the CTA in March-but it's doubtful these artists will ride the CTA to get there.

This isn't New York, where star spotting on the subway is a sport. Earlier this month, Anne Hathaway was photographed kissing fiance Adam Shulman as he leaned against a train pole. Jessica Alba, Bradley Cooper and Kim Kardashian also have been spied on the subway. Anderson Cooper is a transit regular.

And though Chicago frequently attracts stars for film shoots, concerts, family visits, sporting events and appearances, it's rare to hear about boldface names on the CTA. Perhaps it's that a trip from O'Hare to River North, the Gold Coast or the Mag Mile requires a bus transfer from the Blue Line.

Or it could be that Lolla-goers will have to pack onto buses to get to the concerts.

Or maybe it's that the Chicago Red Line station, the closest stop to The Peninsula and other fancy hotels, doesn't have the best reputation thanks to last summer's flash mob attacks. Smashing Pumpkins frontman Billy Corgan's brother reported being mugged by a group on the Red Line last year.

Still, there are a few stars who have made it onto the train. RedEye looks at a few "E-

» Working the line: Two weeks ago, celebrity chef-traveler Anthony Bourdain was in Chicago. After his car, nicknamed the "Pimpmobile," broke down, be found himself on one of the new rail cars with the aisle-facing seats. His producer tweeted that "Thankfully Chicago has an efficient (and air conditioned) alternative to pimping..."

Meanwhile, "Top Chef Texas" runner-up Sarah Grueneberg passed up a car as a prize, telling Going Public she regularly rides the No. 146-Inner Drive/Michigan Express bus.

Just for sport: Knicks star Iman Shumpert, who played at Oak Park and River Forest High School, has a tattoo of the Green Line from Harlem/Lake to Central on his left arm. The tattoo is supposed to "remind him all the time where he is from," a Knicks spokesman told GP earlier this year.

In baseball, former Cubs manager Mike Quade made a splash last year when he took the Red Line on Opening Day.

Perhaps the best way to spot a celebrity on the CTA is to keep a close watch ... on your TV. Here are a couple of movies that show stars on the train.

- "High Fidelity": John Cusack seems lost, not just in his personal life. He takes a confusing Purple Line express ride that goes underground.
- "While You Were Sleeping": Sandra Bullock saves Peter Gallagher from a train and riders from any delays.

STATIONARY A weekly dispatch from a CTA station of note This week: Belmont Blue Line

This Logan Square station is one of the most popular along the O'Hare branch of the Blue Line-so popular that the CTA doesn't want you to leave. There's only one main entrance/exit to this station, which involves a stairway and a narrow escalator from the platform. This stop could benefit from more accessibility-especially for those hurrying to O'Hare with their luggage.

The most disingenuous things on social media

Life is hard, man. Aside from the day-to-day stuff, we counterintuitively struggle with Internet and social media dependency while constantly side-eyeing each other over passive-aggressive Facebook statuses and mixed message tweets. And it's turning a lot of us into paranoid, skeptical nerds. Here are a few of the most fake, disingenuous things you see every day on social media. - JESSICA GALLIART, REDEYE SOCIAL MEDIA LADY

Cmon, you don't really mean that. Stop letting Facebook pressure you into sending congratulatory messages to your engaged. married or with-child friends who you haven't spoken to or seen in real life since that time you bumped into them in your palamas and walk-of-shame hair at 7-Eleven.

Mean tweets about celebrities

There's one reason you include a celebrity's Twitter handle in a tweet insulting them: Because you want a tweet back. You want that 0.5 seconds of Twitter fame-not a real thing, by the way-and you'll probably back down as soon as you get called out for being an idiot, jealous or just a mean person. Cool it, sister.

The Internet-speak version of saying "Just kidding!" after you've insulted someone. Used by crappy people on social media, winky faces typically cap off a passive-aggressive dig at someone as though they cancel out aforementioned dig.

Drew Peterson's Chicago-area neighborhood was peaceful on a recent, muggy afternoon. But residents know the relative peace probably won't last.

Peterson's home on Pheasant Chase Drive in Bolingbrook-just blocks from the home where his third wife, Kathleen Savio, was found drowned in a bathtub in 2004—has been the backdrop for countless TV newscasters since his fourth wife, Stacy Peterson, disappeared in 2007.

In the years since, residents have grudgingly gotten used to the periodic arrival of journalists and occasional visits from tourists, who will drive into Peterson's cul-de-sac, snap a picture and drive off. It might get far worse before it gets better, said resident Rick Hickey, who said he once let Geraldo Rivera park in his driveway during the height of Peterson mania.

Peterson is charged in Savio's slaying, and opening statements in his trial are scheduled for Tuesday.

"If he is acquitted [and returns home], it will be a zoo," Hickey said. "We all want to know what's going to happen."

Neighbors say they have bonded over the Peterson saga, sharing the media glare, trading books about the case and critiquing the Divorce: In 2001 Savio receives a letter accusing Peterson, 43, of having an affair with 17-year-old Stacy Cales, a front desk clerk at a Bolingbrook hotel. Amid the bitter divorce, Savio sends a letter to the Will County state's attorney's office saying she fears Peterson may kill her. They divorced in October 2003.

Neighbors said they look forward to seeing the press horde come and go for what they hope will be the last time once Peterson's trial concludes. In the past, some homeowners have brandished baseball bats to drive news crews away from their lawns, while others more cordially have offered hot dogs to reporters, residents recalled.

"We've learned to look for the, I call them the eyes in the sky"—the rows of towering satellite antennas on top of news trucks-"and the helicopters because you can see them from the road in," said a neighbor, who declined to give her name.

"You watch the news to follow [the case]," she said, "because you want to know if you're going to be able to get down the street when you go home."

Eric Lawhead was in the final stages of buying the house next door to Peterson's when Peterson was arrested in 2009.

"Drew actually walked through the house with me the first time I looked at it. He was out in the yard and said he had never been inside," Lawhead said.

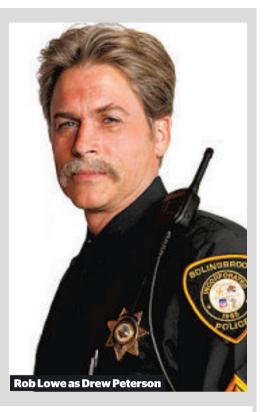

The house, a short sale, probably was cheaper thanks to Peterson's notoriety, and Lawhead's real estate agent had him sign an affidavit affirming that he had been warned about his neighbor's tabloid celebrity.

"It just wasn't appropriate when the little kids got a little older, that they had to see their mom's picture every time they went out of the house," said a neighbor who did not want to be named.

Stephen Peterson, Drew Peterson's oldest son, has been living with his four younger step-siblings in the family home since his father's arrest.

One neighbor said she has walked Drew Peterson's two youngest children, whose mother is Stacy Peterson, several blocks to their school each morning for years.

"They are just wonderful children, so polite," said another neighbor, who declined to be named and whose children are friends with the Petersons. "They have been to my house many times. Someone is raising them right, for them to be the way they are with all they've been through."

Thomas Peterson, Drew Peterson's oldest son by Kathleen Savio, was valedictorian of his class at Bolingbrook High School in 2011.

Was it a murder or an accident?

Chicago Tribune

Former Bolingbrook police Sgt. Drew Peterson placed his third wife into a sleeper hold until she lost consciousness, lifted her into the bath tub in her master bathroom and held her head underwater until she drowned, Will County's top prosecutor has alleged in court.

After she was dead, Peterson allegedly struck Kathleen Savio, 40, on the back of the head, perhaps with his police baton, to make her death appear accidental, prosecutors have said.

Yet before they attempt to prove that Peterson was responsible for Savio's 2004 death, prosecutors will face an unusual obstacle: They'll first have to convince jurors that Savio was murdered.

That process begins Tuesday with opening statements, the unofficial start of the murder trial that began last week with jury selection. It's been nearly five years since Peterson's fourth wife, Stacy, disappeared and the sensational case made national headlines. Drew Peterson helped fuel the media frenzy, doing interviews on "The Today Show," "Good Morning America" and "Dr. Phil," and the saga eventually became a Lifetime TV movie, starring Rob Lowe as Peterson.

After 23-year-old Stacy vanished in 2007, Savio's body was exhumed and nearly two years later, Peterson was charged with Savio's murder. Peterson, 58, is the sole suspect in Stacy's disappearance but has not been charged in that case.

The first challenge for prosecutors is the coroner's jury finding not long after her death that Savio's drowning was accidental. Dr. Bryan Mitchell, the pathologist who performed Savio's original autopsy, also wrote that the gash on the back of her head "may have been related to a fall" in the tub.

A police report notes that Mitchell, a deputy coroner and a crime scene investigator agreed that Savio's death was an accident. Authorities now say they didn't properly investigate Savio's death until Peterson's fourth wife vanished.

Luke Cho is not unfamiliar with shoplifters in his Wicker Park boutique. He's dealt with them a few times in the six months Mildblend has been open at 1543 N. Milwaukee Ave.

But the shop owner wasn't prepared for what happened in his store Saturday as Wicker Park Fest was in full swing: Nearly 20 people entered his store around 6:40 p.m. and made off with about $3,000 worth of clothing.

"This is a whole new ballgame. This is a whole new level," Cho said Monday. "I think they wanted to take the whole damn store. If I wouldn't have locked the door there would have been 30 kids in there."

Cho posted surveillance video of the entire robbery on YouTube. It shows a group of people entering the store, then putting jeans in backpacks and attempting to leave. He said he knew the group's intentions almost immediately, and locked the front door to prevent anyone else from entering.

"I actually gave these kids an opportunity to get out," he said. "I told them, 'I know what's going on here. If you want to leave, the time to get out is now."

Cho said he was able to chase one person down and recover a pair of jeans as employees kept the rest of the group trapped near the doors, but the group shoved its way out-injuring his wife in the process-and left the scene. Cho said his wife suffered cuts and bruises.

Since the robbery, Cho said he's looking at what security improvements can be made to the store. He says he doesn't want to have to install a buzzer system or lock the front doors, but it might be necessary to prevent a mob-style robbery from happening again.

NO ARRESTS

Police said Monday afternoon that no arrests had been made in the mob-style robbery, but the investigation is ongoing. Anyone with information is asked to call police at 312-744-8290 to report tips.

"We just have to be better prepared, that's all," he said.

Other boutiques in the area contacted by Red-Eye said they did not experience increased shoplifting during the weekend fest, but they said the crowds may have made stores easier targets.

"It's a crime of opportunity. They only did it because they were able to because of the crowds," said Eric Williams, who runs jewelry and accessory boutique The Silver Room. "It's a lot of small boutiques (in the neighborhood). A lot of them have one or two people working in them." MSWASKO@TRIBUNE.COM | @MICKSWASKO

WASHINGTON The U.S. Postal Service is set this week to default on a giant payment, the latest blow illustrating Congress' slow progress toward fixing the agency's deep financial woes and one that could damage some customers' confidence.

The Postal Service has said for months that it could not afford to make the $5.5 billion payment for future retiree health benefits, which originally was due in 2011 but was delayed by Congress until Aug. 1.

The mail agency, which relies on sales of stamps and other products rather than taxpayer funds, has said the same about a second payment due at the end of the fiscal year in September.

Congress has so far made no significant push to delay the payment again. Missing the health pre-payment, the first default in the agency's history, would not cause interruptions in service or prevent the Postal Service from paying suppliers and employees, USPS spokesman David Partenheimer said in an email.

GUARD PLAY

Much has been made of 2012's blinding speed, and yes, it's fantastic. But there are two problems. First, their quickest quards-Chris Paul, Russell Westbrook and Deron Williams-are defensive liabilities against '92. Second, if Paul attempts to exploit his offensive advantage over Magic Johnson, he faces David Robinson and Patrick Ewing at the rim and nullifies Kevin Durant and LeBron James as playmakers. The Dream Team guards have size, speed, shooting, defense and ball handling as well as Jordan, the biggest tiebreaker of all time. EDGE: Dream Team

DO-IT-ALL OFFENSIVE TALENTS

2012's biggest advantage is one of evolution: players such as James and Durant simply did not exist 20 years ago. The Dream Team has only one player (Scottle Pippen) who can definitely guard James or Durant, and if Jordan steps up to the challenge, that puts Clyde Drexler on Kobe, Yuck, EDGE: Redeem Team II

PERIMETER SHOOTING

Although Larry Bird and Chris Mullin were outstanding shooters, today's players simply shoot more 3s. Couple that with the shorter 3-point line and 2012 has a nice shooter's edge. But 2012's biggest edge is that their best shooter, Durant, also is their best shot creator, meaning no standing around in the corner like Bird waiting for a teammate's slash-and-kick.

EDGE: Redeem Team II

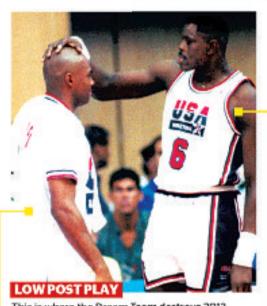

Members of the 1992 U.S. basketball team took home gold in Barcelona

Since Kobe's the one who ramped up all this comparison business, let's get this out of the way: » Jordan, 1992 Olympics: 29 years old, 8 starts, 231 minutes per game, 14.9 points per game, 19 rebounds, 38 assists, 33 steals, 4 blocks.

»Bryant, 2008 Olympics: 29 years old, 8 starts, 23.5 minutes per game, 15.5 points per game. 22 rebounds, 17 assists, 9 steals, 4 blocks. Now add four years to Kobe's age. OK? OK.

EDGE: Dream Team

This is where the Dream Team destroys 2012. Yes, big men play low minutes in international games, but the foursome of Karl Malone, harles Barkley, David Robinson and Patrick Ewing is simply unguardable.

DEPTH

Because this is a hypothetical matchup, what if it's also a seven-game series? Depth would be a problem for Redeem Team II in a single game, and in a series they would have to ride LeBron, Durant, Kobe, Paul and Carmelo Anthony to extreme degrees. 1992's second five of John Stockton, Drexler, Mullin, Malone and Robinson could compete with 2012's starters.

DEFENSE

The advantage goes to 1992 because while the Dream Team has five defensive standouts who also can score, three of 2012's best defenders are offensive liabilities: Tyson Chandler, Andre Iguodala and Anthony Davis. And while both Robinson and Chandler enter this matchup as Defensive Player of the Year, Robinson blocked 4.5 shots per game. Chandler? 1.4.

BEST PLAYER

EDGE: Dream Team

Don't let the low Olympic scoring average fool you: '92 Jordan will be the best man on the court, coming off a season in which he was league MVP, scoring champ and first-team all-defense. Meanwhile, one of Redeem Team II's biggest weaknesses would be its unclear top man.

-James is the best player in the world, but Durant's offensive skill set is best suited to the international game, while Kobe would be so amped to prove his worth against MJ that he probably would demand the ball on a final possession—to his team's detriment.

Two gold medals in one day? It's a pretty good bet. Michael Phelps qualified for Tuesday's 200-meter butterfly final with the fourth-best time; American Tyler Clary is in the mix as well. Phelps is taking aim at his own world record, too. Later in the day he teams with Ryan Lochte and two others to defend the Americans' Olympic title in the 800 freestyle relay.

BARELY A RIPPLE

It's OK to admit it—our hearts broke a little too when American Jordyn Wieber lost out on a spot in the all-around finals. However, the U.S. has a fantastic shot at gold in the team competition Tuesday. If they come through, it will be particularly sweet after taking silver in the previous two Olympics.

LeBron and Co. had a dream, too

stand' and you'll see Nike men Michael Jordan and Charles Barkley, gold medals around their necks, American flags draped over the Reebok logo on their warm-ups. Not exactly Tommie Smith and John Carlos.

Those two images sum up the meaning of each of these great basketball teams. 1992 was all about American exceptionalism sponsored by corporate interests. The Redeem Team, meanwhile, was about restoring American humility AND American excellence by honoring the relationship between the two. What began as an honor steadily morphed into an uninspired mess. By 2000, American

For a meaningful com- fans were turning against USA Basketball, and in 2004, the U.S. returned home with its first non-gold of the professional era.

The forgotten men of that 2004 team were Dwyane Wade, LeBron James and Carmelo Anthony, who, despite their talents, finished seventh, ninth and 11th in minutes played.

That would be enough for many NBA players to throw in the towel. Instead, they became the captains of new USA Basketball executive director Jerry Colangelo's "threeyear mission," leading the U.S. to a bronze finish in the 2006 world championships and regaining the gold in 2008.

It's often said that Magic Johnson and Larry Bird saved the NBA. Well, I've got news for you: LeBron, Carmelo and Wade saved USA Basketball. These men have produced the greatest USA Basketball careers. Not even Jordan can say otherwise.

So yes, in a showdown between 1992 and 2012, I'll take the Dream Team, easy: But my heart lies with this 2006-12 squad, a group you can root for like you do the Bulls. Like the other nations, the U.S. now has a true men's national basketball team, proving that while the talent still resides in the States, sometimes you have to take a cue from the rest of the world.

JACK MISILVERSTEINIS AREDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

U.S. windsurfer and Chicago native Bob Willis is sharing updates from the London Games with RedEye.

For the most part, it has been business as usual gearing up for the Games and tapering.

The big event the past week was the opening ceremony in London. Traveling to the opening ceremony was almost as exciting as the event itself. Once we were close to central London, 13-plus police motorcycles greeted us, in addition to a few police cars. Locals flooded out of pubs, stores and apartments to express a variety of emotions. We witnessed enthusiastic waves, fist pumps and, of course, the double-barreled middle frager.

There were a few moments during the night that have been continually resonating with me, in particular the moment Team USA was waiting in the tunnel before we walked in. The lights from the stadium were shining through the dimly lit tunnel and the amount of euphoric energy the group displayed was nothing like I have ever experi-

The evening of the opening ceremony we didn't get back to the London village until about 1:30 a.m. The entire team quickly passed out and woke at 6 a.m. for a bus to Wevmouth. Upon arriving, my primary focus was to rest after the long evening and get out on the water for a couple of very light (30-45 minutes) sessions as my training finished.

The Olympic regatta starts Tuesday and I have done everything within my ability to control as many variables as possible. I can't wait to race-let the Games begin!

Can nicknamed lovebirds survive the Hollywood hot seat?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

With a collective gasp heard 'round the world last week, "Twilight" fans everywhere discovered that Kristen Stewart had cheated on Robert Pattinson. In a car! In some random building! WITH A MARRIED MAN. At this point, Robsten seems doomed—he packed his bags and moved out of their Hollywood home this weekend, people.com reports. While we mull over how awkward the press tour for "Twilight: Breaking Dawn-Part 2" will be, we rounded up the dossiers of a few other well-nicknamed celeb couples.

BANG! BANG!

Step aside, Jack White. Chief Keef has been added to this weekend's Lollapalooza lineup, the fest announced Monday. The fast-rising Chicago rapper will perform on Perry's Stage at 12:15 p.m. Saturday, which doesn't exactly make him a headliner. So then Jack White can stay.

Triple threat

Two movies might be enough to tell the story of books like "Harry Potter and the Deathly Hallows" or "The Twilight Saga: Breaking Dawn." Peter Jackson, however, will need three movies to translate "The Hobbit" to the big screen. The director of "The Lord of the Rings" trilogy announced Monday on Facebook that his prequel saga will expand to three movies from two.

'Mother' lode

The news from "How I Met Your Mother" is ... wait for it ... good. It's also LEGENDARY! The show's creators have revealed they will release a soundtrack Sept. 24—that's the season premiere date—on iTunes, hitfix.com reports. It will include all of the Robin Sparkles tunes—"Let's Go to the Mall," anyone?—and plenty more.

$172,200

That was the winning bid ($140,000, plus a $32,200 buyer's premium) for a Chewbacca headpiece, used in the original "Star Wars" movies, sold at auction over the weekend, according to thr.com.

Speaking of NPH ...

"Dr. Horrible's Sing-Along Blog," the online musical-comedy brainchild of "Avengers" director Joss Whedon, is coming to TV, set to air Oct. 9 on The CW, ew.com reports. Neil Patrick Harris stars as the lovelorn evil doctor.
